SENATE.

WASHINGTON, August 14—Reagan introduced a bill to define crimes and provide for the punishment of offenses committed with them.

In the course of a discussion as to its reference Sherman said he had given some attention to the subject in order to see how far it was within the constitutional power of congress to prohibit frauds and combinations in restraint of trade. It was very clear there was no such power in congress to be derived from its power to raise and collect taxes. It was a power which ought to be exercised to a certain extent in England and other countries. Whether such laws could be enforced by national authority on the statute books of the United States under its peculiar system of government there was room for doubt.

Reagan said the bill was framed with a view of avoiding the constitutional difficulty of assuming to legislate on a matter of state regulation. There was also a difficulty in defining what a trust was, and in providing appropriate penalties.

The bill was referred to the committee on finance.

Bayard's resolution of inquiry as to the number of persons in the civil service of the United States who were engaged in the sale of liquors, was referred to the committee on the judiciary.

Chandler, moving that the select committee on Indian affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the Indian treaties, remarked that the committee had been in session for months, and had only reported two treaties.

The senate then resumed consideration of the Sioux treaty, and was addressed by Morgan.

At the conclusion of Morgan's remarks the senate resumed consideration of legislative business.

Sherman introduced a bill to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and to punish and prevent them, which was referred to the committee on finance.

After executive session the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

O'Neill of Missouri rose to a question of privilege, sent to the clerk's desk and had read an article in a Washington paper to the effect that the effort of members to pass a bill for the relief of Cherokee freedmen was the result of a bargain with J. Milton Turner, the freedmen's attorney, and was intended to secure the delegate from the Indian territory to the democratic party at the Indianapolis colored convention. O'Neill said he desired to brand the statement as an absolute lie from beginning to end.

Owen of Indianapolis, who he understood to be the author of the article as having objected to consideration of the bill because of his knowledge of the bargain, inquired whether the gentleman in characterizing the statement as a lie meant any reflection upon him.

O'Neill replied that the statement that there was any bargain in the introduction or preparing of the bill, no matter by whom made, was a lie, an absolute, plain, unvarnished and unqualified lie.

Owen suggested that the gentleman was [illegible]

O'Neill replied that the gentleman knew that was a party to any bargain in connection with this bill he states what is a lie.

Owen thought that the gentleman was incapable of offering him a personal affront. He had objected to the bill on account of certain language which he had heard J. Milton Turner use. And had subsequently told members of congress [illegible] Turner had conversation that possibly difficulty would arise upon the floor or during the campaign considering the matter. The language Turner had used was of a character to make his objection. He did not [illegible] it was his duty to allow the democratic party to pay its debts to J. Milton Turner for his services rendered at the Indianapolis convention.

Sayers of Texas moved that the house go into committee of the whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Townshend inquired of the speaker what bill would be considered if the motion should prevail.

The speaker declined to state, declaring that that was a matter to be determined by the chairman of the committee of the whole.

Townshend stated that he insisted that the deficiency bill should be considered, the subject of fortifications being in conference with the army appropriation bill.

Sayers's motion was then put, but the house refused to consider the question. Townshend's motion to consideration of the bill was then put, objection being reported to the house on the question whether the house would go into the consideration of the fortification bill. The vote resulted yeas 17, nays [illegible] no quorum voting.

The house then took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., during which time the committee on elections will meet, and the house will be in session for the consideration of pension bills.

The evening session was devoted to the consideration of pension bills, but no business of importance was transacted. The session was a very dull one, and before 10 o'clock adjournment was carried.

Accident on the A. & P.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., August 14—The east-bound Atlantic and Pacific train, due in Albuquerque at 1:30 yesterday morning, came in ten hours behind time. The delay was caused by a wreck which occurred on the desert in California near [illegible] miles east of Siberia. The train was running very slowly, not over eight miles an hour, but the trucks of the express car were not in good working order and refused to adjust themselves to the curve. The consequence was that the car was pulled off the track, and the [illegible] away from the [illegible] and engine, which were left on the track, went tumbling down a thirty-foot embankment, pulling after it the baggage, mail and three emigrant coaches and two sleepers, well filled with passengers, all of whom suffered injuries more or less severe. All the cars were badly wrecked, and some of them beyond repair.

The mail clerk, who was badly bruised, tried to telegraph to Albuquerque for assistance, and some of the wounded passengers tried to send dispatches to friends, but the railway company controlled the only wire, and positively forbade operators to send anything that would convey the information that there had been an accident. The passengers of the wrecked train were picked up by the special of Superintendent Gaddis, which came along about twelve hours after the accident. The passengers were all very indignant at the manner in which they were treated by the company, especially its refusal to permit them to send telegrams to friends. They expressed their condemnation of the company in a series of resolutions shared by every passenger on the train, declaring that the accident was due to the carelessness or incompetency of the officials of the road in permitting cars to be run that were unfit for service, and pronouncing the conduct of the company inhuman and barbarous in refusing to permit wounded passengers to telegraph their friends.

Suits of Indictment.

NEW YORK, August 14—The congressional committee to-day resumed its investigation into the evils of emigration. C. Packard, commissioner of ships' stores, took the stand to give evidence of his knowledge of aliens commanding American vessels. Witness had heard of many such cases, and said it was [illegible] for foreigners. The reason of this was that the aliens worked cheaper than the natives. Their salaries ranged from $40 to $75 a month. The natives whom they drove away received from $50 to $125 monthly. Witness went on to say that foreign crews were usually engaged by these alien captains. Two thirds of the crews were foreigners, he said, principally English and Norwegian sailors.

Captain Briggs, now engaged as traveling agent for a ship chandler, knew of many cases where American vessels were bought by Britishers. Despite these charges the vessels always continued to fly the American flag. This was so that their vessels could engage in the coast-wise trade. Foreign captains are driving Americans from the command of vessels. Witness himself had to give up his ship because his wages were to be reduced from $125 to $90 a month. His place was taken by a Norwegian.

Dissatisfied With the Platform.

NEW YORK, August 14—Congressman Ashley P. Fitch of this city has resigned membership in the republican [illegible] organization of this city. He says he is in favor of reasonable revision of the present tariff in the direction of decreasing the cost of the necessaries of life and supplying American workmen with cheaper raw materials for manufacture. He is also absolutely opposed to any reduction of the taxation of whisky.

Dated this 7th day of August, A. D. 1888.

J. W. B. SCOTT, JOHN CAMPBELL,
Secretary. Chairman.

General Harrison's speeches since his nomination have helped his party and greatly increased his personal popularity. He is steadily gaining in popular favor, and a nephew of the late Vice President Hendricks declares that he will carry Indiana by 8,000 majority.

The hearty and enthusiastic receptions which have been accorded to Mr. Blaine since his return to the United States are ample evidence of the strong hold which he has upon his party. His declared intention of taking an active part in the campaign will give it a certain degree of enthusiasm which few campaigns since the war have possessed. From this time on the canvass will be pushed with energy and every inch of debatable ground from Maine to California will be closely contested. In such a canvass and with such a leader the party's success is almost assured.

Congress should pass a bill giving the president the power to veto items in an appropriation bill without preventing the bill as a whole from becoming a law. The necessity for such a measure has just been shown by the president's action on the river and harbor bill. He stated that the bill contained several items which he believed were unjust, and to which he could not conscientiously assent. At the same time he felt that by vetoing the bill he would delay a great number of improvements which were absolutely necessary and imperative. Under the present law the appropriation bills are in many instances made the means for obtaining large sums of money for useless and unlawful purposes. By modifying the law as proposed a great amount of this waste of the people's money would be prevented.

Several of the state papers have mentioned the name of Mr. John Brisben Walker as republican candidate for congress. As some of Mr. Walker's friends have taken hold of his canvass with a great deal of energy he writes the following letter to explain his position:

COLORADO SPRINGS, August 12.

To the Editor of the GAZETTE:

Will you be kind enough to say that I shall not be a candidate for the republican nomination for congress.

Yours truly,
JOHN BRISBEN WALKER.

We make the announcement with sincere regret. Without making any comparisons whatever with any other candidate Mr. Walker has those qualities which would lead him to be a very useful congressman for Colorado. He has every interest and thorough knowledge of the industries of the state together with great energy and a pleasant and agreeable manner of presenting his views to the public.

The delay in the appearance of President Cleveland's letter of acceptance is being going to extraordinary lengths but considering the issues with which it must deal this delay is not surprising. It will be no easy matter for the president to convince the workingmen of the middle and eastern states that the Mills bill is not inimical to their interests, while the democratic wool growers of the country will be anxious to know how they are to be benefitted by free wool. Besides the independents who voted for him four years ago, will demand some personal explanation of the manner in which his pledges concerning civil service reform have been kept. He will also have to state what great exigency in public affairs has arisen which has induced him to be a candidate for re-election, when four years ago he solemnly declared that the interests of the country would be best promoted if the president was made ineligible for a second term.

The rice growers of the south have petitioned the republican members of the senate committee who are preparing a new tariff bill to leave the duty on their product undisturbed. The present duty on rice is about 112 per cent. Under the Mills bill it was reduced to about 100 per cent, and the growers state that if any further reduction is made that the rice growing interests of the country will be practically ruined. The area of country devoted to rice plantations is insignificant when compared with that given to the raising of wool, the amount of capital invested in each industry shows a large preponderance in favor of the latter. If the Mills bill should become a law the average duty of 35 per cent on wool will be removed, and the wool grower will be deprived of any protection, while the rice planter of the south still has his product protected at 100 per cent. The only reason assigned for Mr. Mills' consideration for the rice planter, and his neglect of the wool grower is that rice is a southern product and therefore should be protected.

STATE NEWS.

A Bible study conference is now in progress at Glen Park.

The trial of the Tennyson murder case at Leadville has been postponed for three months.

It is reported that the Denver & Rio Grande-Western railroad will soon be operated to Salt Lake City.

The number of prospectors in Big Horse gulch, near Fairplay, is being augmented daily, and Fairplay is doing quite a boom.

In the majority cases in Leadville the issue will be between the citizens and people's parties. Only in Denver Democratic candidates of the former and here Irwin has been nominated by the latter.

COUNTY NEWS.

Our Traveling Correspondent on the Divide and in the Mountains.

MONUMENT.

The ranchmen are [illegible] their crops which are not overly encouraging, excepting those under irrigation. H. B. Walker claims to have the finest field of oats in the county, which stand four and a half feet high with well filled heads and will undoubtedly yield 40 or 45 bushels per acre.

The most encouraging crop in this section is that of A. P. Jackson who has 100 acres of corn and 32 acres of potatoes with fair prospects of a reward for his labors. The ranchmen in general seem most hopeful and believe that the potato yield will reach at least 60 per cent of last year's crop which with an increase of 25 per cent in acreage will make the total yield about the same.

Quite a number of substantial improvements are being made in this vicinity. School district No. 19 at Borrville has let a contract for the enlargement of the house by a 12-foot addition and vestibule in front, which will almost double the seating capacity and add greatly to the convenience of the building. When completed this district will have the best and most fully equipped school building in any rural district of the county.

The new residence of J. E. Reynolds, near Husted, is rapidly nearing completion. The style of architecture and the surroundings in general make this one of the finest residences on the Divide.

Both John Pring and H. B. Walker have lately erected large and commodious barns, which gives them storage room for their crops, and also enables them to handle their improved blooded stock more profitably and safely. Such improvements in stock and buildings reflect the thrift and enterprise which characterize the ranchmen of this locality.

MANITOU PARK.

A visit through this section revealed it to be the most favorite part of the county, the drouth having effected crops but slightly. The yield will be of fine quality and of average amount. The owners of the town site of the contemplated city on the Midland railroad propose two methods for watering the city, one by sinking wells and using windmills, the other by piping water from a large spring one half mile distant on the east. Either scheme is very feasible and would insure a good water supply for the city. Mr. Baldwin has secured bonds for the erection of a $10,000 hotel, the lumber for which is now on the ground. The other site is owned by Mr. Wosmer who contemplates the erection of several cottages which in addition to his new storeroom which he occupies with a choice stock of general merchandise, will all conspire to give the town an impetus which will result in building quite a resort as nature has already been very lavish in the use of her brush it only requires the art of man to make this resort unequalled.

FLORISSANT.

A few miles farther up the road, surrounded by a beautiful and productive country, we find Florissant which is beginning to claim her share of the health and beauty seeker who yearly visit our state, and the close proximity of Crystal peak, the petrified stumps, the fossil beds and her numerous glens and canons of unequalled beauty and grandeur, her fine drives and good boarding atmosphere, will in a short time make Florissant a place sought for by the tourist.

The Four Mile road from Ivywild drive from the station is situated the Mount Pisgah house with Mrs. Faulkner as proprietress where one can find the best accommodations and fishing. Very little need be said about the hospitality of the above named house and fishing ground, and Mrs. Faulkner's present time with the numerous guests. Any one contemplating a visit should not fail to call on Mrs. Faulkner and see the remains of a lake which was discovered by the first settlers. Also naturalists have examined the remains and claim that the animal must have been of enormous size, standing not less than twenty-four feet in height. Other remains have been discovered, which proves the surrounding country to be a great field for the very interesting study of natural history.

Wholesale Letter Robbery.

CHICAGO, August 7.—A systematic wholesale letter box robbery, extending over a period of two years, uncovered in the theft of thousands of dollars, as well as hundreds of drafts, checks and postoffice orders, was startling. An unknown amount, though estimated at several hundred, and explosive matter in connection with complaints made against the Canadian postal service by the Toronto postoffice inspectors, Postmaster Von Oberkamp and Thomas F. Mack, an inspector, made arrests on Monday last. Mack is a resident of Toronto, Can., and Von Oberkamp is a native of Germany, but has lived in Chicago for a number of years. Von Oberkamp is also a member of a noble family while Mack is a naturalized citizen of the United States.

Discovery of the scientific perfection of the robbery came when Von Oberkamp [illegible] Mack [illegible] Von Oberkamp [illegible] to find a trunk filled to the top with letters. They had all been opened [illegible] mark and had the stamps removed. It was then discovered that Von Oberkamp occupied another room, and when this was searched another trunk full of letters, all in the condition described above, was found. At another room in a hotel was found a valise packed with broken mail matter and a bunch of keys, one of the keys on a railway mail catches and another would fit a box in the city. The captured mail matter was taken to a post office inspector. The envelopes contained [illegible] were usually sent through the mail, [illegible] goods samples and bits of jewelry to writing pads and photographs. But that which showed the magnitude of the depredations was the presence of piles of insurance policies, trust deeds, drafts, checks, money orders and promissory notes. These [illegible] to the aggregate nearly $100,000. The [illegible] of stock [illegible] drawn from a wholesale grocery house of Chicago on the Cold Spring National bank. Numerous other leads ranging from $2 up to $500 and upward drawn for $500 each were found.

Von Oberkamp was arrested Saturday and confessed his guilt. Monday Postoffice Inspector Stuart received a letter from the postal authorities at Toronto, Can., stating how the postal [illegible] were possessed, and a number of letters, arrests will follow. It being suspected some letter carrier was implicated in the robbery had a duplicate of his key made and gave it to Von Oberkamp, charging with [illegible] the [illegible] Toronto with [illegible] were before Commissioner Dennis Mack who was arrested on suspicion [illegible] examination and was held to the federal grand jury under [illegible] Von Oberkamp's case was continued until Tuesday on bonds of the same amount. THE PARIS CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

A Letter From a Distinguished French Composer.

PARIS, August 3, 1885.

The annual musical school of France has recently closed its year's work and now is the moment to say a word about its management.

The conservatory is located in the Palais Royal. Professors, or rooms for all of a series of buildings forming a rectangular garden or court, in the centre of which is [illegible]. These consist of [illegible] and there has long been much talk of enlarging them. In fact, a plan has been drawn up and submitted to the minister of fine arts, and it will be executed in due season. In the meanwhile we do the best we can under the circumstances and try not to get in each other's way.

There is much hard work done at the conservatory. The study of music is long and difficult. It demands the closest attention, continuous application, and absorbs all the faculties of those who take it up, however gifted they may be. Music is a jealous and exacting master.

I have heard of a machine which takes a live rabbit and turns you out a felt hat all made up. Just so our conservatory takes a pupil who doesn't know the first thing about harmony and produces a clever composer prepared to delight the public with remarkable compositions. If he has any natural talent, he will succeed, for he has learned in his chosen field of art all that can be taught. In order to prove the correctness of this assertion I have simply to cite the names of living composers who were trained in this school and who carried off the Prix de Rome. I refer to Ambroise Thomas, Gounod, Gouvy, Delibes, Guiraud, Paladilhe, Guiraud, Duprato, Lenepveu, Theodore Dubois, and A. Massenet. Reyer and Léo Delibes never took part in our competitive examinations, and Saint-Saens was a pupil of Niedermeyer, although he was studied in the conservatory. But these are exceptions as rare as they are brilliant.

[illegible] one of the greatest of our composers, a man whose [illegible] has produced so many remarkable works. I propose to show our readers how the various courses are conducted which constitute a complete system of musical education. But in the first place, let us say a few words of the heart of the school.

M. Ambroise Thomas—the talented author of Mignon and Hamlet, the poetical and the highest composer of Mignon and Hamlet, and the director of the conservatory, has held several chairs in the school and on the death of Auber, succeeded him as director. Mr. Thomas is full of life and youth, although slowly approaching his eighty-first year. It would be a mistake to judge him by his stern looks and then pronounce him morose. He is both a dreamer and a man of sensitive nature. In repose he appears grave, but if you speak with him, he immediately becomes animated, his eye sparkles and his language is full of warmth and spirit. He is kind and urbane, with his thoughts always bent on art and the conservatory.

M. Ambroise Thomas' lieutenant is M. Emile Réty, the general secretary of the conservatory. Tall, calm, obliging, M. Réty has but his fingers' ends every fact connected with the school where he was educated. He is a perfect encyclopædia, and is ever ready to throw light on any obscure point that is submitted to him.

Such are the two men who are at the head of this grand institution. I now take up the professors.

Musical composition, fugue and counterpoint are taught by Guiraud, Léo Delibes, and Massenet; harmony by Duprato, Emile Pessard, Théodore Dubois and Lenepveu, who teaches the ladies' class. M. Guiraud, the author of Gretna Green, Madame Turlupin, Piccolino and Galante Aventure is an excellent professor, excessively obliging, and an adored of the conservatory. M. Léo Delibes has written Coppelia and Sylvia, those two exquisite ballets that are known everywhere. Le Roi l'a dit, Jean de Nivelle, and Lakmé, which Miss Van Zandt rendered with so much grace and purity. M. Léo Delibes, as a matter of course, is always [illegible] with his pupils, full of fun and [illegible].

As for Massenet, if I may be allowed to speak of him, he is the creator of Don César de Bazan and Manon at the Opera Comique, Roi de Lahore and the Cid at the Opera, Hérodiade at the Brussels theatre de la Monnaie, etc., and is now busy on Esclarmonde et Roland, an opera in four acts and eight tableaux, which will be given, next season at the Opera Comique. The principal part will be [illegible] Miss Sibyl Sanderson, of San Francisco, [illegible] a brunette with a remarkable voice. She belongs to one of the best families in the United States.

M. Duprato is the author of Trovatel [illegible] Le Berger, M. Emile Pessard wrote Calcium, Francesca and Tabarin. M. Théodore Dubois is the composer of Aben Hamet and Tarandale. M. Lenepveu has produced Florentin and Velléda. He received at London by Prince [illegible] and the [illegible] of Wales.

It will be seen from this catalogue of names and works that the Classes in harmony [illegible] in good hands. And now a few words in regard to how instruction is given; how the professors teach.

Our pupils begin work quite young, and it is not uncommon to see boys and girls of fifteen, fourteen and even less in the classes of harmony. The elements of music and solfaing are generally learnt elsewhere than at the conservatory, which has, however, classes in solfaing attended chiefly by singers and instrumentalists. The beginning of the conservatory is, therefore, the last thing. There is no entrance examination, but it rarely happens that a pupil is admitted immediately on presentation. He enters first by an audition [illegible]. There are two [illegible] a year, in the [illegible] right to take part in the competitive examinations at the end of the year. The candidates for the [illegible] must [illegible] the professors whose [illegible] at the [illegible] of the [illegible] to the [illegible] according to [illegible] A full account of the matter is [illegible]

I can give the best idea of the conservatory instruction by speaking of my own classes, which, by my excuse for so intruding my own personality in this [illegible]

I meet my pupils twice a week. A good half of the time is devoted to fugue and counterpoint which are studied with great care. I used to have a "Book of Fugues," where were kept the best work of my pupils. The rest of the time is given up to composition. The pupils show me their pieces and sketches which I criticise and correct if necessary.

It is a charming picture to see about [illegible] young people attentive eager for instruction, silently listening to the professor's remarks, and having faith in his experience and the honesty of his judgments. There is nothing exclusive here. Professors and pupils have the same passion for all that is beautiful, powerful, graceful and original. French, German and Italian composers are appreciated at their just value, regardless of nationality or reputation. The Paris conservatory is, in a word, national and international at one and the same time.

There is one stage of musical art that a pupil should enter upon as soon as possible. I refer to sight reading. At the conservatory great attention is given to this branch, and it is a common occurrence for a professor to invite his pupils to his own house in order to give them some supplementary instruction in this difficult accomplishment.

This brings me to the competitive examinations. The pupil has now completed his musical education, he is thoroughly acquainted with all the technical part of his art. He next comes forward to compete for the Prix de Rome. He first undergoes a preliminary examination consisting of the composition of a vocal fugue in four parts and of an orchestra chorus, which has to be written in six days. The competitors are shut up in separate rooms during this period, and those that come out victoriously are admitted to the competition for the coveted Roman prize. There are never more than five or six of these lucky ones.

Each competitor for the Prix de Rome is given a room where there is a piano and table, but the rest of the furniture, bed, chairs, etc., he must furnish himself. The same is true of his food. The merchant generally does the cooking for these imprisoned budding composers. For twenty-five days each competitor is wholly separated from the outside world. Only once during the twenty-four hours is he permitted to take an airing in the garden, and even then he is watched by an employe of the school. He may not have a book, a treatise, a musical method of any description. If he writes, his letters are read by a functionary before they are posted, and the same individual opens every envelope addressed to the competitor. In short, he is a prisoner, who, if any of these rigorous rules are violated, is excluded from the examinations.

The competitors are given a cantata in which there are three characters, and are required to put to music and to write the orchestral score. At the expiration of the twenty-five days they leave their seclusion, and set to work to find singers who will execute their composition in the presence of the jury. It is generally the artists of the Opera and Opera Comique who offer their services, gratuitously, of course, on these occasions. Finally each competitor has his cantata ready for execution. It is given twice, in public, at the conservatory in the presence of the musical section of the Academy of Fine Arts, composed of Charles Gounod, Ambroise Thomas, Léo Delibes, Ernest Reyer, Saint-Saens and the undersigned. To these are added three judges chosen by the Academy of Fine Arts. After the audition, the jury makes a report to the Academy of Fine Arts, and finally a second audition is given before all the sections of this academy assembled in the institute. Then the Prix de Rome is awarded.

The successful candidate spends five years at the Villa Medicis, the French school at Rome, at the expense of the state; or he may visit the chief musical capitals of Europe, or, after remaining a certain length of time at the Italian capital he may return to Paris, where he draws from the public treasury a certain sum. Wherever he may be during these five years the state looks out for his material wants. In return, he is required to produce every year a certain amount of work as fixed by the rules. At the end of these five years, he has the right to have played at the Opera Comique one act piece, and, if necessary to make room, upon the stage of the Odeon for his [illegible]

Does it pay the state to do all this? Let others judge. I do not think they can. Experience of this kind costs dear. [illegible] of course, [illegible] but [illegible] they do not [illegible] as the Paris one.

Our young school is distinguished by [illegible] quality, quality, quality. Beyond us in many young musicians who I make no doubt will be able to keep as we are trying to do the high reputation of the French school of music. At the present France stands unquestionably at the head of musical Europe. Never has this country had a large number of composers, and never were they more various and different. This one is noted for its grace, that one for its strength, this artist is known for his [illegible] another is famous for the passion, emotion and [illegible] that springs from his own heart and touches the hearts of his hearers.

The French composers of to-day are so prolific that there is not in Paris a sufficient number of theatres in which to bring out their works. They are obliged to go to provincial cities and even to neighboring foreign countries in order to find an unoccupied stage. It is French musicians who furnish plays to the Theatre de la Monnaie, at Brussels, one of the best operatic theatres in Europe, and the same is true at Ghent, Liege, the Hague and even Weimar. Never before has the French school presented to the world such an ensemble of first-class talent, and it must be admitted, at the same time, that no small part of the credit is due to the conservatory.

But the work of the conservatory is not limited to the education of composers. It also trains singers, instrumentists and virtuosos of the first order.

The conservatory has not less than eight professors of singing: Bussine, Saint-Yves Bax, Archainbaud, Warot, Masset, Boulanger, Barbot and Crosti. There are two professors of opera comique: Ponchard and Emon Achard; and one professor of opera. Obin, who made such a fine reputation at the Opera. Most of the best singers now on the stage, especially Talazac, Duc, Sellier and Escalais, four incomparable lyrical stars, were trained by the foregoing professors.

The piano is taught by [illegible] masters, who, before filling the professor's chair, had travelled all over the world and been invested with magnificent triumphs. It is not only at Paris that one is acquainted with the names of Diemer, Bertal, Delahaute, and Tissot, the first two professors of the male classes, the two last professors of the ladies' classes. Besides these higher classes there are numerous secondary ones and, in addition, classes of solfeggio, of the key-board, etc.

What I have just said of the piano instruction may be repeated concerning the violin. There are four principal [illegible] of this instrument, presided over by Massart, Sauzay, Dancla and Maurin. There is no violin instruction that can rival ours. The celebrated school of Ghent is in its decadence, and that of Berlin, although excellent and under the direction of that celebrated Hungarian virtuoso, Joachim, cannot equal ours here in Paris.

There are two classes for the violoncello, in charge of Delsart and Rabaud, who follow the teaching of the old masters, Valin and Jacquard. It will be remembered that Valin, who still lives, was the first to teach the "détaché," or staccato, and he it was who, out of a rather languid instrument, has made a light, trifle one, as capable of expressing joy or sorrow.

The conservatory instruction in wind instruments is unique. I am not exaggerating when I state that nowhere in the world can you find professors equal to ours in this branch of music. Gillet (bombay), Altes (flute), Rose (clarinet), Jancott (bassoon), Mohr (horn), Arban (cornet), Cercelier (trumpet), and Delisse (trombone) are all remarkable of their [illegible] in virtuosity.

The organ is taught by M. Cesar Franck, a composer of great talent; the harp by M. Hasselmans; and the history of music by M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, a Prix de Rome and very learned musician, who has restored to us Greek music with infallible exactitude.

I should add to this hasty sketch the important fact that foreigners are admitted to all the classes of the conservatory, where in their case as with the French pupils, instruction is gratis. They come, naturally, in large numbers, especially when they learn that they may take part in every examination with the single exception of the competition of the Prix de Rome.

Such, then, is the Paris Conservatoire de Musique, a school where the elite of the French musical world keeps alive the grand French traditions, without, however, closing their ears to what is being done in foreign lands. French musical art is not hampered by the narrow restrictions of any particular school; it is not ruled by coteries or belittled by national vanity. Its chief aim is to cultivate clearness and precision, its two most brilliant qualities. To the conservatory belongs the credit of having done much to preserve these fundamental principles [illegible] characterize the work of its graduates, who, in return, cherish a strong affection for their alma mater. And especially fortunate are those of us who, as professors, never sever our ties with the old spot where we have spent so many happy and profitable hours.—J. Massenet.
